Alnwick Castle in Northumberland, England, is considered haunted and boasts a reputation for paranormal activity, including the "Grey Lady" and a 12th-century "vampire" legend. It is frequently listed among the top haunted castles in the UK due to these tales. The Vampire of Alnwick Castle is about a 12th-century chronicler reporting that a deceased, hunchbacked master of the castle would rise from his tomb at night to roam the town and terrorize villagers, bringing pestilence. Then we have the Grey Lady. The Grey Lady is a popular ghost story involving the spirit of a young maid who reportedly fell to her death down a service chute and is said to haunt the castle’s corridors. According to reports, the castle has high levels of spooky activity, with many people documenting when they see full body apparitions roaming the hallways or sitting on a bed. Let's take a closer look at the Alnwick Castle Vampire and The Grey Lady. While we are at it, we might as well look into Obby the Obnoxious Ghost.

THE ALNWICK CASTLE VAMPIRE

The 12th-century Alnwick Castle vampire legend, recorded by chronicler William of Newburgh, tells of a jealous man who died from a fall while spying on his wife. This vampire rose from his grave to plague the town with disease, putrid smells, and attacks. Villagers later unearthed his bloated corpse and burned it. After the villagers burned the corpse, the curse supposedly ended. The vampire when a living mortal was considered a "master" or a servant of the castle. This jealous man was obsessed with his wife and suspected her of cheating with any male she came in contact with. While spying on his wife, he wasn't paying attention to his chores while working on the roof. The jealous man had a catastrophic fall from the roof and broke several bones. The fall brought the man to his demise. Soon after his burial, a terrifying sickness, described as a "stench of death" or plague, struck the village. The villagers believed that the jealous man placed a curse on the village. The deceased was blamed for rising from his grave, spreading sickness, and causing terror. Villagers, accompanied by the man's brother, reportedly dug up the body and found it "gorged and swollen with a frightful corpulence," with fresh blood poured from it, according to 12th-century writer William of Newburgh. The Villagers took the corpse outside the town walls, burned the corpse in a field. The Villagers celebrated when the plague stopped. The Villagers were successful in ending the curse. This tale is considered one of the earliest recorded vampire accounts in England and is frequently featured during the castle's events.

THE GREY LADY

Alnwick Castle in Northumberland, England, is reportedly haunted by a "Grey Lady" ghost, believed to be the spirit of a former servant or maid who tragically died after falling down a service chute. She is often described as appearing as a faint gray figure, wandering the ancient halls and corridors of the castle. It is believed that the Grey Lady is a servant named Emma, she is thought to be trapped in the castle, re-enacting her tragic demise. Like many "Grey Lady" tales in British folklore, this apparition is often linked to lost souls or tragic, unexpected deaths within the household, appearing in various locations within the sprawling castle grounds. While Alnwick is famous for many legends, including a 12th-century vampire tale, the Grey Lady is considered a standard apparition of the castle's dark folklore.

OBBY THE OBNOXIOUS GHOST

Karen Caruso Walker while on vacation in England, stopped by Alnwick Castle. While she was exploring the interior of the castle, she kept hearing a man's whispering voice saying "tickle". Karen then felt ghostly fingers tickling her stomach and side. Karen told the entity to stop being so obnoxious. When the tickling started again, Karen yelled: "Obby stop!" Karen thought the name of this ghost should be Obby, since he was so obnoxious. Karen says while exploring the castle, her hair was pulled 2 times. Karen felt a small slap to the back of the head and there was one moment when she felt hands around one of her ankles. Karen had to cut her visit short, because Obby was relentless in his harassment.

Lithuania is considered very haunted, boasting a rich folklore filled with spirits, witches, and devils, particularly in its centuries-old manors and castles. Known as a "land of legends," many sites offer year-round ghostly experiences, ranging from romantic specters to terrifying apparitions.

Radviloniai Manor:
Radviloniai Manor in Lithuania is considered haunted, with the current landlady, Irena Rainčė reporting numerous spirits residing there. She has described encounters with ghosts, including spirits that appear late at night asking for things, a phenomenon she has grown used to over time. Irena Rainčė has stated she has many stories about the spirits, noting, "I wonder if these premises were ever consecrated, as many spirits are living here up to this day". Spirits have been reported to appear at night, with one even requesting a specific action in the garden. Lights turn on and off on their own. Sometimes if you are walking away from the manor, the lights will constantly flicker, it would seem like this was some kind of communication asking the person to come back to the manor. The site is known for mysterious events and is associated with the noble Radvilos family of the Grand Duchy of Lithuania. It is frequently featured in lists of Lithuania's most haunted or "spooky" places, alongside locations like Paežeriai Manor. However, some accounts suggest the building is largely abandoned, and while stories of ghosts exist, the physical site is now mostly known for its decay and the surrounding trees.

Paezeriai Manor:
Paežeriai Manor in Lithuania is considered haunted and is frequently associated with tales of a "white maiden" spirit. According to local legend, the ghost is that of a maid who committed suicide in a nearby lake after a tragic romance with a 19th-century landlord, with her spirit reportedly wandering the manor grounds. The legend, popular in the Sudovia region, concerns a 19th-century landlord, Zigmantas Gauronskis, and a young maid. After she became pregnant, the landlord sent her away, leading to a broken heart, an abandoned newborn at the doorstep, and her subsequent suicide. Stories suggest the maid's soul struggles to find peace, resulting in a "white shadow" being seen in the park and near the manor in the mornings. The Paežeriai Manor features a, neoclassical building which, combined with the surrounding park, contributes to its reputation as a "spooky place". Visitors of the manor's grounds have heard a woman sobbing, crying.

The Witch of Rudninkai Forest

Hikers and campers that have seen this witch claim that she looks wrinkly and haggard. Some say she has the tongue of a snake, it's split in the middle and the tongue is long. If you encounter this witch, it is advised that you receive a spiritual cleansing as quickly as possible. People who have encountered the witch have been known to get deadly sick. Some people who got sick from seeing the witch will hack and cough, vomit, get cold chills, bones ache, etc. The Witch is a very dangerous entity.

Trakai Island Castle:

Trakai Island Castle in Lithuania is considered haunted, specifically by the legend of the Grand Duke Vytautas, who supposedly died in King Jogaila's hands there. Visitors and locals believe the Duke's ghost sometimes wanders around the castle towers, though this apparition is often said to bring good fortune to those who see him. It is often jokingly noted that Trakai is one of the only haunted castles where the living (visitors) actually hunt for the ghost rather than the other way around. The island and its surrounding 21 lakes are frequently featured in local folklore, filled with romantic and tragic legends. The castle is a restored 14th-century gothic, red-brick structure situated on an island in Lake Galvė. Its medieval ambiance and, at times, chilly lakeside setting create an atmosphere that supports these supernatural stories. The Castle is now a museum and serves as a primary tourist attraction in Lithuania. Special Note: Jonas, a visitor to the castle encountered the full body apparition of the Grand Duke Vytautas. The Grand Duke smiled at Jonas and 3 days later, Jonas inherited a large fortune from an uncle that passed away. Jonas believes it was the sighting of the Duke, that brought the fortune into his life.

Kretinga Manor:
Kretinga Manor in Lithuania is reputed to be haunted, with local legends claiming it is inhabited by the ghost of Ignacy Masalski (Ignotas Masalskis), the Bishop of Vilnius and Clerk of the Grand Duchy of Lithuania. His restless soul is said to haunt the manor, likely due to his fondness for the property. A few visitors says that he likes to tap on furniture or walls. A visitor named Markas Bajoras says he encountered Ignacy who told him to take a seat. Markas was scared and left immediately out of the room. Markas thinks about that day when he encountered the Bishop, and wishes he would have sat down and had a chat with the Bishop. Markas says he is harmless.

Siesikai Castle:
Siesikai Castle in Lithuania is well known for its hauntings. The main haunting centers on a tragic love story. Locals and folklore tell of a duke's wife who was bricked up alive in the castle tower as punishment for a forbidden romance and to this day, her ghost is said to roam the nearby lakeshore. Some people have heard the duke's wife crying and screaming hysterically. The young wife of a Duke of Daumantas fell in love with a foreign knight and would meet him by the shores of Lake Siesikai. Upon learning of the betrayal, the duke allegedly had her walled up in the tower. Visitors and locals sometimes hear or see her ghost waiting by the lake. The castle is a roughly 500-year-old manor located in the Ukmergė district of Lithuania, often featured in local spooky, historical tours. The Siesikai Castle Devil sometimes is seen by visitors, they say he is 3 feet tall and has a maniacal smile on his face. This devil is known to try and push people. Witnesses to this devil say he has reddish leathery skin.

The Hill of Crosses:
The Hill of Crosses in Lithuania is widely considered a "haunted" or "scary" location by travelers, but it is primarily a profound site of pilgrimage, resilience, and national identity holding over 100,000 crosses.

While often listed among the world's scariest places due to its eerie, chaotic atmosphere, it is more accurately described as a sacred spot. Folklore suggests a church once stood on the mound and was buried by a storm. Locals speak of witnessing a ghostly procession of phantom monks at sunrise. Another legend claims the mound is a former burial site for 14th-century pagan warriors, whose spirits are said to haunt the area. A popular origin story tells of a father who placed a cross to cure his dying daughter, setting the precedent for the thousands of votive crosses placed there for healing and faith. The sheer volume of crosses, combined with the sound of rosaries clinking in the wind, gives the hill a macabre, "dark tourism" vibe, particularly in the evening. The hill was brutally bulldozed by Soviet authorities three times, yet locals continued rebuilding it, turning it into a powerful symbol of endurance. Despite its reputation for being spooky, many visitors (and Pope John Paul II in 1993) describe it as a place of immense peace, hope, and love.

Vilnius University & Old Town:
Vilnius Old Town and Vilnius University are frequently described as haunted, with numerous legends, spooky tales, and guided ghost tours operating in the area, particularly after dark. The city's tumultuous history—including plague, war, and pagan rituals—has contributed to its reputation as a place filled with spirits. Known for stories of hauntings and eerie happenings within its ancient walls. Pilies Street 22 is a spot often featured on ghost tours, known for its "haunted yard". Basilian Monastery Churchyard is described as a place steeped in mystery where the whispers of former monks can be "heard". The Royal Palace is linked to stories of, and sightings of, ghostly inhabitants. Literatai Street is associated with the spirit of the poet Adomas Mickevičius. Vilnius Police Station (Kosciuskos street) is known for reports of a "bildukas" (poltergeist) that causes unexplainable loud steps and coughing, frequently experienced by those in custody and officers on duty. The "Ghost House" (Antakalnis Street 25) is famous for tales of a former secret laboratory in the basement. Cathedral Square & Subačius Gates is a historic site for past pagan burials and an executioner's home, both rumored to be haunted.

Other Hauntings in Lithuania.
The Cruel Baron of Pakruojis that walks around the grounds and will purposely try and scare people. The Cruel Baron is also known to leave scratches on people he encounters. At the Kaunas Dungeons you might hear screams and rattling of chains of past prisoners. Residents of Lithuania tell stories of devils and witches that haunt forests and manor ruins.

WESTMINSTER HALL AND BURYING GROUND IN BALTIMORE, MARYLAND

My brother Andrew Somprise Soyo aka Andy when visiting Baltimore, Maryland, stopped by the Westminster Hall and Burying Ground. Andy says that he felt a presence and something touched the back of his neck. My question….. is this place haunted? Come to find out, the answer is a resounding yes! Westminster Hall and Burying Ground in Baltimore, Maryland, is considered one of the most haunted locations in the city. Established in 1786, the cemetery is known for its eerie catacombs—created when the church was built on piers over top of existing graves in 1852—and for being the final resting place of author Edgar Allan Poe.

Reported Hauntings and Paranormal Activity:

- The "Screaming Skull": Legend tells of a murdered minister whose skull was buried in the cemetery and, for years, produced high-pitched, piercing screams, especially on quiet nights.
- Lucia Watson Taylor: A young woman who died in 1816 is often seen dressed in white, kneeling in prayer by her own grave before vanishing.
- The Angry Caretaker: A 19th-century groundskeeper is reportedly still active, sometimes chasing away visitors who are loud or disrespectful.
- Shadowy Figures: Visitors and staff have reported seeing hazy figures, feeling cold spots, and hearing voices in the catacombs, according to Tour Baltimore Ghosts.
- Edgar Allan Poe: The author himself is said to linger near his monument, contributing to the site's reputation for having a heavy, sorrowful atmosphere, as noted by MidAtlantic Daytrips.

HAUNTED ACADIA NATIONAL PARK
Acadia National Park in Maine is considered one of the more haunted national parks in the United States, with numerous legends, ghost stories, and reports of paranormal activity centered around Mount Desert Island. Several specific areas within the park are associated with hauntings. Let's take a look at some of them.

Ship Harbor Trail:
The Ship Harbor Trail in Acadia National Park, Maine; is frequently cited as one of the most haunted hikes in the state. Known for its scenic 1.3-mile figure-eight loop through woods and along the coastline, the trail has a dark history stemming from numerous shipwrecks, with local legends warning of restless spirits. The trail is known for its scenic coastal views during the day, but local lore claims it is haunted by the victims of shipwrecks, particularly the 1739 wreck of the Grand Design. Visitors have reported seeing strange, ghostly lights out at sea. Legend speaks of a captain who went down with his ship during a storm in the early 1800s; hikers have reported hearing phantom footsteps following them along the trail. The area is said to be haunted by the crew and passengers of the Grand Design, who died of exposure and were buried in unmarked graves in the woods. Hiker Wayne Johnson says when he was walking the trail, he could hear footsteps behind him. As Wayne started walking faster, the footsteps that he was hearing were going faster. Finally, Wayne started sprinting and the disembodied footsteps now sounded like they were running behind him. Wayne was so terrified that he fell scraping parts of his body, hands, arms, legs. A cold rush of wind went through him and to this day, Wayne feels he encountered a ghost on that trail. A ghost that was trying to hurt him.

The Devil's Oven:
Located along the coastline, this sea cave is considered a "portal to the underworld" and has reports of red flashing lights at night and the sound of chanting or crying in the daytime. At Compass Harbor Trail, we have visitors who claim to have seen a ghostly figure dressed in early 20th-century attire near the ruins of "Oldfarm," the estate of George B. Dorr, who was the first superintendent of Acadia. Then we have Bass Harbor Head Light. Reports indicate the lighthouse is haunted by a "vengeful construction worker," a female entity in a rocking chair, and a vanishing large deer that appears during snowfall. The cave is rumored to be a site where "evil" people were historically burned alive, with their souls allegedly sucked into the underworld. Visitors have reported hearing wailing and seeing mysterious, glowing, or flashing lights inside the cave. The Devil's Oven is considered too dangerous for casual visitation and is not marked on official park maps. It is only accessible during low tide, and trying to visit it can be risky, with a high danger of getting trapped by the tide.

UFOs/UAPs at Acadia National Park
Unidentified Flying Objects (UFOs) and unexplained aerial phenomena have been reported in the vicinity of Acadia National Park and Mount Desert Island, Maine. Reports, including sightings from the 2010s and 2020s, often involve unusual lights, orbs, or objects seen over Cadillac Mountain, the ocean, and surrounding towns like Bar Harbor. At Cadillac Mountain (2013) a group of residents reported four round, orange-colored objects emitting a low sound that traveled from near Cadillac Mountain toward Duck Island in July 2013. Sand Beach (2022), there were reports in 2022 included accounts of jets potentially chasing a UFO near Sand Beach in Acadia National Park. Observers and local investigators have documented sightings involving fast-moving lights that shift formation, as well as orbs hovering over coastal areas and plunging into the ocean. Witnesses have seen UFOs dive into the ocean and become USO (Unidentified Submerged Objects). Maine is considered a high-activity state for UFO reporting, with many sightings occurring over coastal waters and forests, placing it among the top states for per-capita reports in 2026.

HAUNTED MOUNT ROBSON PROVINCIAL PARK

Mount Robson Provincial Park, located in British Columbia, is deeply associated with legends, mysteries, and eerie, unexplained experiences. The area, known for its mist-shrouded peak, the highest in the Canadian Rockies, carries a reputation for a mysterious atmosphere. Local indigenous traditions speak of the mountain as a sacred and spiritual place. Legends tell of a giant named Ts'úùt'ina protecting the land, with the fierce winds around the peak attributed to his spirit. Mysterious lights, known as the "Ghost Lights," have been reported at night, believed by some to be the spirits of ancestors watching over the mountain. Reports from visitors suggest strange occurrences, including sightings of unexplained figures, such as "nightwalkers"—entities seen in dark, forested areas. Other campers have reported hearing ape-like noises and experiencing intense feelings of being watched. Stories sometimes blend with the nearby Highway of Tears or local unsolved disappearance cases. The mountain itself is often described as a "misty" or "mysterious" peak, frequently cloaked in clouds, adding to its unsettling allure.

Missing People at Mount Robson:

There have been instances of missing people at Mount Robson, which is known as one of the most challenging peaks in North America. Given its extreme terrain, unpredictable weather, and technical nature, the mountain has been the site of multiple disappearances, particularly among climbers, some of whom have never been found. There have been reports from some hikers that they have seen ghostly hikers hiking up the mountain and then just disappearing. Notable Disappearances on Mount Robson are a disappearance that occurred in August of 1984. Nicholas Vanderbilt (25) and Francis Gledhill (29) went missing while attempting to climb the 12,972-foot mountain. Despite a massive search effort by the RCMP and park rangers, they were never located. While numerous fatal accidents have occurred, the high-altitude, steep terrain, and glaciers mean that recovering bodies is often impossible, leading to several cases where climbers have gone missing permanently. In 2019, a tourist died after falling into the rapid-moving Robson River near the popular Berg Lake Trail. Mount Robson is known for short weather windows and dangerous conditions, with storms often trapping climbers on high ridges. Another interesting fact about Mount Robson is that many people have seen strange lights zipping around Mount Robson. UFO sightings on Mount Robson are not uncommon.

SPECIAL NOTE: Cryptids are plentiful in Maine and British Columbia. In British Columbia, there have been witnesses who have seen the Giant Raven, Sasquatch and Nuk-Luk (Bushmen). In Maine there have been Sightings of the Specter Moose. NEXT: Drawings of the Giant Raven and the Specter Moose.

After reading these new titles from Image Comics, then enjoy a nice dessert. That dessert would be a Glenn Danzig comic book called G.O.T.H.
